Prior Experience

Before joining the DarrowEverett team, Julia spent time working for a highly regarded Boston-based law firm, where she handled an assorted caseload ranging from civil disputes advocating for sexual abuse victims to complex divorce and custody disputes. Julia also has experience as a law clerk at the same firm, where she assisted clients with complex financial issues, both personal and business-related. She also worked extensively with victims of sexual abuse and their families, supporting them in litigation against institutions such as schools, coaches, and employers.

Representative Matters

- Secured an award of more than $2 million on behalf of a client that suffered abuse at the hands of leaders of the Boy Scouts of America. The award comes following BSA's decades-long practice of covering such misconduct through an "ineligible volunteer" database that shielded the crisis from public knowledge for so long.
